If by chance you were strolling through Coventry's Allesley Park on a rainy Sunday afternoon recently you may have seen a flash of red in the corner of the park. And it would have been Diana-Lyn Arnold's 34–24–34 lines being captured forever on film.

'Although it was pouring with rain and at least most people stayed indoors there were still a few strollers out who must have wondered what was going on,' said Diana-Lyn. She lives in Hinckley, about ten miles from Coventry, and it was only by a remarkable coincidence that she was photographed in Coventry by Jon Bernard.

For a start, Diana-Lyn had the opportunity of emigrating to Australia a few weeks before her modelling session, but rejected the idea because she is very attached to Hinckley. And she only met Jon because she was bored one day and decided to tag along with a couple of friends who went to Jon's studio for a test. 'In the end it was me he wanted to photograph,' said 18-year-old Diana-Lyn who now devotes all her time to modelling, although her two biggest ambitions are to become a croupier or a TV hostess. In fact, next January she's entering the Miss ATV contest. Hopefully the judge will be a Virgo. 'You see I'm a Scorpio,' explained Diana-Lyn, 'and according to my astrological studies Scorpios are supposed to get on well with Virgos.'

HELLE

PHOTOGRAPHED BY JOHN FOWLER

When stunning Danish beauty Helle Kjaer appeared as our cover girl and in the centre spread of Vol 15 No 1 back in January, we were swamped with demands for a return appearance. Readers all over the country wrote to us praising her stunning 35-24-35 figure and her face of almost perfect beauty. The response was amazing.

So we decided to bow to your requests and are happy to bring her back again so we can all feast our eyes on the delights of this top model. 'It is just wonderful that so many readers have sent in letters about me,' said Helle when we told her about the fan mail. 'I want to thank them all for paying me so many compliments. And it is funny to think that until I came to England two years ago I had not done any modelling at all.' Twenty-one-year-old Helle was born in Copenhagen where she worked for an export company. She came over here after she met an English boy and with her looks and figure she found it easy to break into modelling. Since then she has appeared in national newspapers and also on TV advertisements.

JULIA

PHOTOGRAPHED BY JOHN ALLUM

Ask 19-year-old Julia Browning what she does for a living and she'll probably tell you 'Knickers.' Not that that would be a sign of rudeness, only that 36-22-35 Julia would be describing the counter she mans at her local Marks and Spencer's. 'I don't see anything wrong in working in a shop, provided that's not all your ambition extends to. Even Glenda Jackson used to serve in Boots.'

Not that Julia has an acting career in mind. 'Far from it,' she says with a smile which gives herself away, 'I don't think I've got the personality to project myself. I basically lack confidence. I would, however, like to get into some aspect of the entertainment industry. I'd really love to meet someone like Dennis Waterman. Oooh, he's lovely.' Julia was born and raised in Birmingham and left school with three O-levels – English, Maths and History – and worked for two years as an office junior with a firm of estate agents in the city centre. 'I hate working in town,' she says, 'you can't wear nice things, pastel colours and the like, without them getting so dirty. And in summer it's really awful, all sticky and petrol fumes. I think I could very easily fit into a rural life although I've never even been on a farm.'

Away from her store duties Julia is an avid movie-goer and lists her favourite films of all time as Don't Look Now, Close Encounters, Star Wars, The Adventures of Robin Hood and The Empire Strikes Back. Recently Julia caused a near riot in Colmore Row near the cathedral. 'It was funny looking back, but I was so embarrassed. I was wearing a pair of frilly knickers – not St Michael I should add – and I was walking around town one Saturday when I felt this terrible slipping feeling under my skirt, and there in broad daylight the elastic in my knickers gave way and they slid to the ground. Everyone was watching me, I felt awful, so I stepped out of them, picked them up and rushed into a shop for another pair. It felt very breezy down there,' she laughs.

MAYFAIR'S GIRL OF THE MONTH / JULIA BROWNING

Sooty

PHOTOGRAPHED BY ED ALEXANDER

Nineteen-year-old Sodiroulla Turner, from Muswell Hill in North London, is used to being asked if she will play the xylophone. 'Sodiroulla grates somewhat in English,' she explains, 'and as long as I can remember, I've always been known as Sooty. You see, both my parents are Greek, but they came to Britain before I was born to open a shop in Edmonton. I speak fluent Greek, but I've never been there.'

Sooty attended Friern Barnet School but admits to playing truant on most days. 'I hated school, and just wanted to get out of the place. Even today I don't like working a five day week,' 38-24-36 Sooty adds. 'So, a couple of days modelling here and there is really ideal for me.' She recently had a modelling assignment in Chichester – 'It was for a very strait-laced job and involved wearing a very old Victorian dress' – which proved a little embarrassing. 'I could have died: my boobs popped out. One moment they were in and the next they burst out. It was very embarrassing because it wasn't that type of job.' Sooty married when she was 17, but is now separated. 'It was a mistake to marry so young – I'd never advise it.'

When relaxing between modelling assignments Sooty can usually be found enjoying her favourite hobby of dancing. 'I really enjoy discos, but I also do Greek traditional dancing. You know, Zorba-style stuff, and even if I do say so myself, I'm pretty proficient at it.' Sooty may have the chance to improve her dancing as she has booked a holiday in Crete and is looking forward to learning first-hand about Greek life and custom. As for men, Sooty has very definite views. 'I can't stand men in jeans,' she says. 'I prefer them dressed in suits. And, oh yes, I like a man with a nice bum on him. Muscular, but not too muscular. I like to see a man fill out his trousers; I like a nice handful of bum. It makes a change, don't you think for a girl to say so?'

At the accountant's where she works, Vida is known for her sense of humour and fondness for practical jokes. 'I suppose I look fairly serious usually so people do not suspect me when I slip a whoopee cushion under the cushion of a chair or leave a huge fake spider in the ladies loo.' She nearly got into trouble once when she gave her boss a packet of onion-flavoured chewing-gum. 'He offered a piece to an important client and they were both chewing away for a couple of minutes before they realised. I laughed so much I had to run to the loo. Luckily they both saw the joke.' Vida expects her boyfriends to have a good sense of humour. 'I value that in a man above everything, even more than looks.'
